Saturday night at half past ten o'clock

DEAREST, MOST BELOVED LITTLE WIFE,

I was exceedingly delighted and overjoyed to find your letter on my return from the opera. Although Saturday, as it is post-day, is always a bad night, the opera was performed to a full house and with the usual applause and repetition numbers. It will be given again to-morrow, but there will be no performance on Monday. So Sussmayr must bring Stoll in on Tuesday when it will be given again for the first time. I say for the first time, because it will probably be performed several times in succession. I have just swallowed a delicious slice of sturgeon which Don Primus (who is my faithful valet) has brought me; and as I have a rather voracious appetite to-day, I have sent him off again to fetch some more if he can. So during this interval I shall go on writing to you. This morning I worked so hard at my composition that I went on until half past one. So I dashed off in great haste to Hofer, simply in order not to lunch alone, where I found Mamma too. After lunch I went home at once and composed again until it was time to go to the opera. Leutgeb begged me to take him a second time and I did so. I am taking Mamma to-morrow. Hofer has already given her the libretto to read. In her case what will probably happen will be that she will see the opera but not hear it. The N.Ns. had a box this evening and applauded everything most heartily. But he, the know-all, showed himself to be such a thorough Bavarian that I could not remain or I should have had to call him an ass. Unfortunately I was there just when the second act began, that is, at the solemn scene. He made fun of everything. At first I was patient enough to draw his attention to a few passages. But he laughed at everything. Well, I could stand it no longer. I called him a Papageno and cleared out. But I don't think that the idiot understood my remark. So I went into another box where Flamm and his wife happened to be. There everything was very pleasant and I stayed to the end. But during Papageno's aria with the glockenspiel I went behind the scenes, as I felt a sort of impulse to-day to play it myself. Well, just for fun, at the point where Schikaneder has a pause, I played an arpeggio. He was startled, looked behind the wings and saw me. When he had his next pause, I played no arpeggio. This time he stopped and refused to go on. I guessed what he was thinking and again played a chord. He then struck the glockenspiel and said "Shut up." Whereupon everyone laughed. I am inclined to think this joke taught many of the audience for the first time that Papageno does not play the instrument himself. By the way, you have no idea how charming the music sounds when you hear it from a box close to the orchestra—it sounds much better than from the gallery. As soon as you return—you must try this for yourself . . .

[part of a letter from Mozart to his wife, written early in October, 1791. Mozart died on December 5, 1791.]

LIVE CONCERTS

George Houle, playing the oboe, and Roy Bogas, at the piano, will give a concert in KPFA's studio on Mon., Jan. 23, at 8:20.

Kenneth Klaus will play his own 48 Tokas for Piano, in the studio on Tues., Jan. 24, at 8:15.

Bernhard Abramowitsch continues his Beethoven cycle on Thur., Jan. 26, at 8:15 with the sonatas op. 14 #1 in E major and op. 57 in F minor (the Appassionata). Mr. Abramowitsch is playing all thirty-two of the Beethoven piano sonatas in this series.

Alma Bonner, soprano, and Eugene Gash, pianist, give a recital in the studio on Mon., Jan. 30, at 8:15.

Leta Spira will play a piano recital on Tues., Jan. 31, at 8:15.

Eric Vaughn and William Corbett Jones give the second of their two programs devoted to Bach's Art of Fugue, on Thurs., Feb. 2, at 8:15. Mr. Vaughn will continue his discussion, and Mr. Jones will play Contrapuncti Nos. 11-20.

The Little Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Gregory Millar, will give a concert in the Berkeley Little Theatre on Fri., Feb. 3, at 8:30. It will be broadcast live, directly from the theatre, over KPFA and KPFB.

SIGN-ON AND SIGN-OFF—as many of our listeners have noticed, we have started the new year with new music for opening and closing the broadcast day. The sign-on is now Stravinsky's March Royale from L'Histoire du Soldat. The sign-off is the Air de Ballet from Gretry's Zemire et Azor.
